

Students can resubmit certain assignments for additional credit. You can earn up to half the points allotted to a problem by correcting it.

How to resubmit an assignment:

1. Write up new, corrected solutions to problems that were marked incorrect on a separate sheet of paper. Make sure to indicate which question is being addressed.
2. Staple the new sheet to the back of the original assignment. Write “RESUBMISSION” on the front of the original assignment. Do not otherwise alter the original assignment.
3. Turn in the resubmission within one week of receiving the original graded assignment. For example, if you receive a graded assignment on Monday, you can resubmit a corrected version of that assignment no later than the following Monday at the beginning of class.

Like in all assignments, you should show your work in resubmissions.

Resources allowed while preparing resubmissions: You may consult the book, your notes, other students, office hours, the internet, and any other sources available to help you learn how to correct your assignment. Once you are writing up your resubmission you should set aside these other resources and work alone/unaided. You must fully understand the work you submit.
