Physiological Ecology and Supervision of Honours Student

Research Interests:

General: Adaptation of structure and function and the physiological ecology of vertebrates, especially reptiles and amphibians. The interface of physiology with ecology, behavior, morphology, and evolutionary biology. Emphasis on almost all aspects of biology of snakes.

Current research: (1) Multidisciplinary investigations of behavior, physiology and ecology of insular populations of cottonmouth snakes and their mutualism with colonial nesting birds in the Cedar Keys of Florida. Increasing emphasis on aspects of community ecology related to climate change and persistence of the Seahorse Key bird rookeries. (2) Water balance, drinking behavior, and distribution of sea snakes, with emphasis on macroecology related to climate change. (3) Gravitational adaptation and cardiovascular physiology of vertebrates. (4) Water and thermal relations of amphibians and reptiles, with emphasis on transepidermal exchange. (5) Structure and function of vertebrate integument, with current emphasis on integrative studies of skin structure, lipid secretions, water permeability and climatic adaptation in arboreal frogs, in addition to plasticity of the skin permeability barrier in squamate reptiles. (7) Long-term interests in animal coloration, disturbed environments, fire ecology, and conservation.
